

TULARE BASIN WILDLIFE PARTNERS
Creating Opportunities for Nature and People

Your Corporate Legacy

Investing in the Tulare Basin isn't just good for nature; it's also good for business. Companies can, and do, significantly impact efforts to conserve land, water, wildlife, and places for people to recreate and learn. Investments in conservation help protect business assets, mitigate risk, and create opportunities. Tulare Basin Wildlife Partners recognize the important role the private sector plays in advancing conservation and below, offer ways your business can leave a lasting impact on the Tulare Basin.

Financial Support

Simple, easy, and immediate, many companies choose to support Tulare Basin Wildlife Partners through a financial donation or grant. You can designate the gift for a specific project or leave it undesignated for the organization to apply to the greatest conservation need. Consider also making a gift in honor or memory of someone who made a difference in your company or to honor a special occasion.

Workplace Giving

Consider involving your employees in charitable giving. Offer your employees an opportunity to support Tulare Basin Wildlife Partners by providing a gift matching program. Engage your employees in your commitment to conserving the Tulare Basin by encouraging workplace giving and matching your employee's donations.

Employee Volunteering

Tulare Basin Wildlife Partners provide the chance for your employees to get out on the land and lend a hand. From planting trees and scattering native grass seed to monitoring the effects of restoration efforts, your employees will find a rewarding and satisfying way to contribute to conservation efforts.

Real Estate

A real estate gift allows you to make a substantial gift to Tulare Basin Wildlife Partners while receiving significant tax and financial advantages. Tulare Basin Wildlife Partners accept many types of real estate, including farms, ranches, commercial property, and homes. You may also reserve the right to use the property if you wish. If you own unfarmed land in the Tulare Basin, consider donating it to form a new or expand an existing nature preserve.

In-kind Donation

Tulare Basin Wildlife Partners accept in-kind donations of materials, goods, or services. This might include items such as equipment or native seed for restoration projects; providing office supplies or printing services; or lending your business skills and expertise in a variety of conservation or organizational management realms.
